“Kim is an outstanding addition to our partner group,” says Brad Kitchens, president and CEO of ScottMadden. “She works comfortably within Corporate & Shared Services and also within Energy, in part due to her keen understanding of process design and improvement and Lean principles. She’s a world-class trainer and public speaker. She has it all.”

She recently worked on HR organization design and a new service delivery model for a non-profit, has implemented Lean methodologies for a large electric utility provider, and has assisted clients with redesigning processes and implementing shared services.

Prior to joining ScottMadden, Kim worked as a Lean Coordinator in the Duracell Battery Division at The Gillette Company. Over her 10-year tenure at Gillette, Kim served as a mechanical engineer and a quality engineer as well as a production manager.
